LISA TIEMANN

(1981 Kassel, Germany)

She lives and works in Berlin. Artist that uses form, materiality and colour in her sculptural work to address universal questions. Her creative process is motivated by philosophical inquiry that resonates in her work and leaves a personal fingerprint. Instead of searching for definite answers and creating a static sign system she is interested in challenging existing paradigms that attribute a constant value to all things. The underlying theme of her work is the volatile relationship between form and meaning. In this sense her sculptures are snap-shots demonstrating a momentary status quo within a dynamic environment. With her sculptural series Couples she centres on the relationship between two elements of different materiality. The artist outlined a series of basic forms that she translated into respective sculpture couples. Each one consists of one clay and one paper object that have joined together both taking on the same predefined form. While the two elements are closely nestled together and can be perceived as a unity they remain separate entities. The space between the two elements is where attracting and rejecting forces generate creative friction and where balance can be manifested. Tiemann's chosen forms do not appear as constructed or complete poses but rather represent a transitional position within a continuous course of movement. The elements have a subjective quality and seem to have bent and stretched themselves into their position of their own accord.
